THIS IS YOUR LUXURY MARKET REPORT

MAP OF LUXURY RESIDENTIAL MARKETS

Welcome to the Luxury Market Report, your guide to luxury real estate market data and trends for North America. Produced monthly by The Institute for Luxury Home Marketing, this report provides an in-depth look at the top residential markets across the United States and Canada. Within the individual markets, you will find established luxury benchmark prices and detailed survey of luxury active and sold properties designed to showcase current market status and recent trends. The national report illustrates a compilation of the top North American markets to review overall standards and trends.

- LUXURY REPORT EXPLAINED -

The Institute for Luxury Home Marketing has analyzed a number of metrics — including sales prices, sales volumes, number of sales, sales-price-to-list-price ratios, days on market and price-per-square-foot – to provide you a comprehensive North American Luxury Market report.

Additionally, we have further examined all of the individual luxury markets to provide both an overview and an in-depth analysis – including, where data is sufficient, a breakdown by luxury single-family homes and luxury attached homes.

It is our intention to include additional luxury markets on a continual basis. If your market is not featured, please contact us so we can implement the necessary qualification process. More in-depth reports on the luxury communities in your market are available as well.

Looking through this report, you will notice three distinct market statuses, Buyer's Market, Seller's Market, and Balanced Market. A Buyer's Market indicates that buyers have greater control over the price point. This market type is demonstrated by a substantial number of homes on the market and few sales, suggesting demand for residential properties is slow for that market and/or price point.

By contrast, a Seller's Market gives sellers greater control over the price point. Typically, this means there are few homes on the market and a generous demand, causing competition between buyers who ultimately drive sales prices higher.

A Balanced Market indicates that neither the buyers nor the sellers control the price point at which that property will sell and that there is neither a glut nor a lack of inventory. Typically, this type of market sees a stabilization of both the list and sold price, the length of time the property is on the market as well as the expectancy amongst homeowners in their respective communities – so long as their home is priced in accordance with the current market value.

REPORT GLOSSARY

REMAINING INVENTORY: The total number of homes available at the close of a month.

DAYS ON MARKET: Measures the number of days a home is available on the market before a purchase offer is accepted.

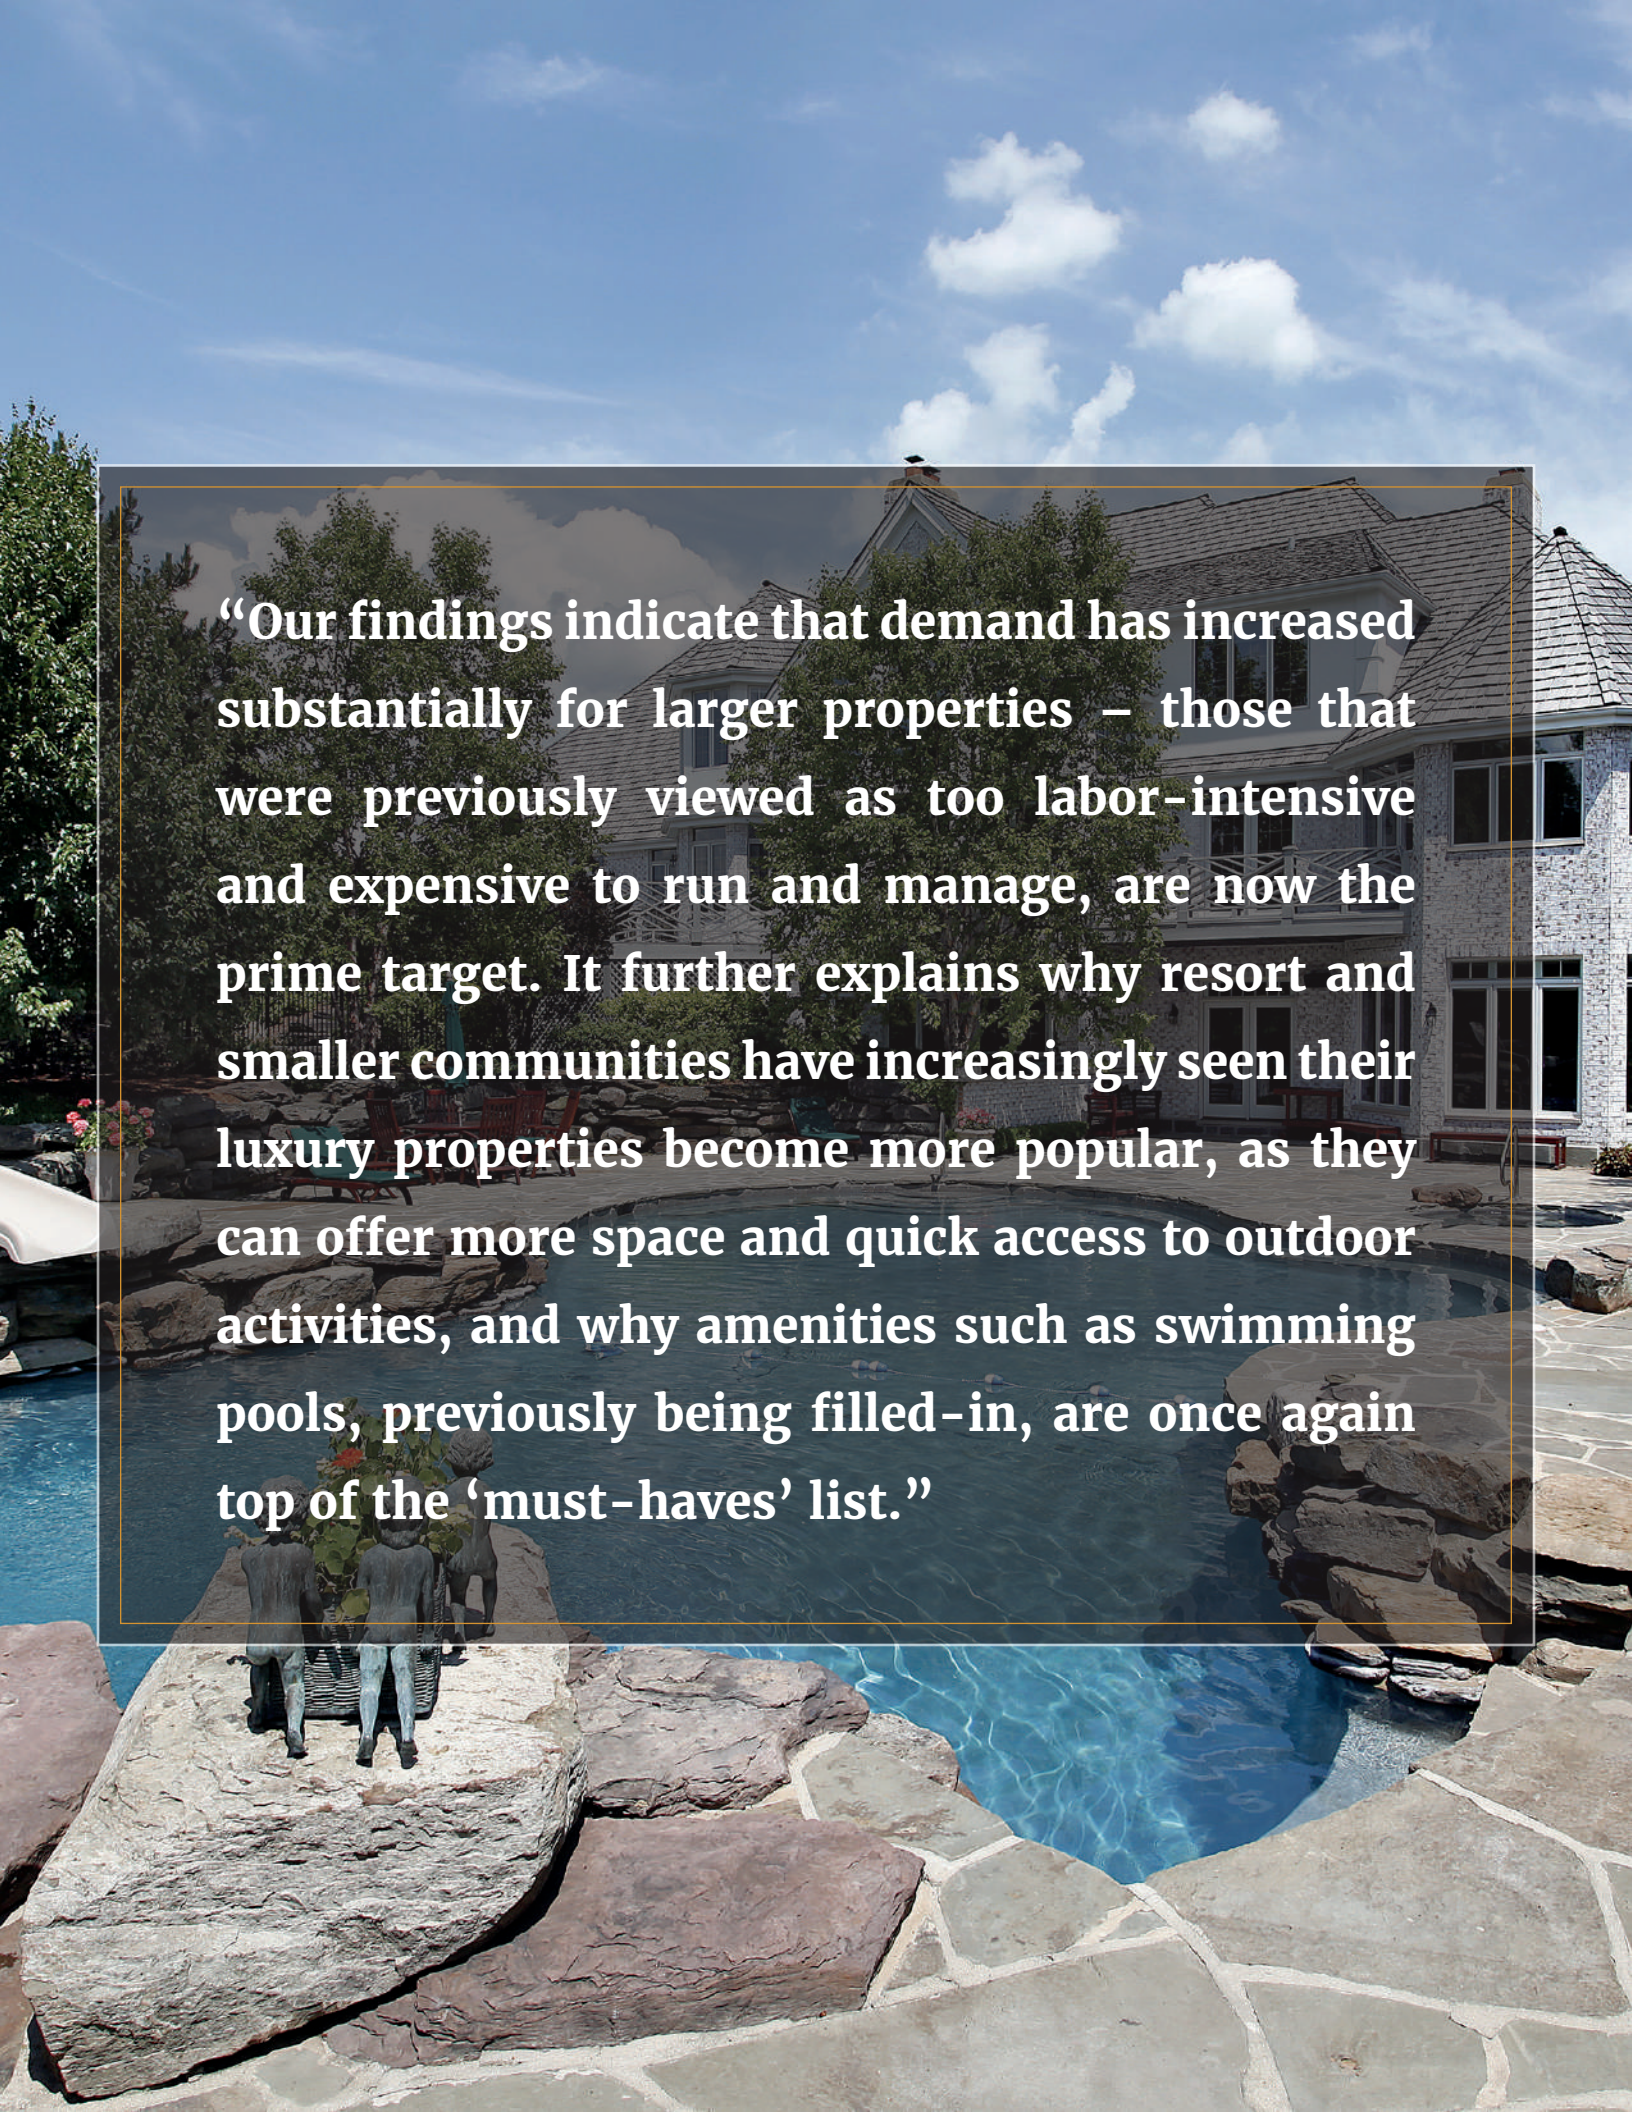

LUXURY BENCHMARK PRICE: The price point that marks the transition from traditional homes to luxury homes.

NEW LISTINGS: The number of homes that entered the market during the current month.

PRICE PER SQUARE FOOT: Measures the dollar amount of the home's price for an individual square foot.

SALES RATIO: Sales Ratio defines market speed and determines whether the market currently favors buyers or sellers. Buyer's Market = up to 14%; Balanced Market = 15 to 20%; Seller's Market = 21% plus. If >100%, sales from previous month exceed current inventory.

SP/LP RATIO: The Sales Price/List Price Ratio compares the value of the sold price to the value of the list price.

“Our findings indicate that demand has increased substantially for larger properties – those that were previously viewed as too labor-intensive and expensive to run and manage, are now the prime target. It further explains why resort and smaller communities have increasingly seen their luxury properties become more popular, as they can offer more space and quick access to outdoor activities, and why amenities such as swimming pools, previously being filled-in, are once again top of the ‘must-haves’ list.”

NORTH AMERICAN LUXURY REVIEW

Fall Changes

Last month, the Luxury Market Report reviewed how the affluent's changing demands has affected their real estate choices not just in terms of property size and amenities, but also the location of their primary residence.

The luxury real estate industry now fully recognizes the significance of these key requirements as well as the importance of addressing the physical, social, and mental/emotional/spiritual dimensions of their affluent buyers.

These changes in demand are not only reflected in the Institute's on-going analysis of the luxury real estate market, but also corroborated by 'on the ground' intel from our members in communities throughout North America.

In today's luxury market, home purchase decisions are now being based on the experiences, features, and amenities that enable their owners to enjoy a luxurious lifestyle from within the boundaries of their property and offer quick access to recreational spaces.

Our findings indicate that demand has increased substantially for larger properties – those that were previously viewed as too labor-intensive and expensive to run and manage, are now the prime target. It further explains why resort and smaller communities have increasingly seen their luxury properties become more popular, as they can offer more space and quick access to outdoor activities, and why amenities such as swimming pools, previously being filled-in, are once again top of the 'must-haves' list.

Redfin just announced their third quarter findings on the luxury market, reporting a 41.5% spike in sales year-over-year and a 6.8% price raise for the third quarter. It should be noted that Redfin defines luxury as the Top 5% of the market and bases their finding on 49 of the most populous metro areas in the US.

In review of the Institute's statistical data, which is based on findings that are more in line with luxury being the Top 10% of the market and analyzes over 95 luxury markets in North America, sales of luxury homes rose 62% and shows a price rise of 5% in the third quarter of 2020, compared to the same period in 2019.

Our market summary for September 2020, shows that the single-family market for the whole of North America is officially a seller's market, where demand is greater than supply.

In the US, East Bay, CA had the highest percentage of luxury sales when compared to their current inventory, with Sacramento, CA and Denver, CO following closely. Redfin's statistics show a 86.1% rise in the number of sales in Sacramento and 60.9% in Oakland (located in East Bay) in the last quarter compared to 2020. These statistics show a marked change in location popularity as these metro areas are significantly less densely populated and for the most part offer single family homes for better value for money prices.

In Canada, the luxury market also remained strong throughout the pandemic, with its two most recognized markets – Toronto and Vancouver – recording an increased interest from move-up buyers, versus international investment. Travel into Canada is very restricted, which has likely been a strong factor in the lower number of foreign buyers.

Less dense markets, such as Hamilton, Muskoka, Durham and The Kawarthas in Ontario, and the Okanagan region and Whistler in British Columbia are seeing increased interest in their luxury markets. As remote work is increasingly common, these destinations can offer larger and more private spaces with quick access to nature.

Real Estate experts, on both sides of the border, concur that the combination of being able to work remotely, accessibility of low mortgage rates, the quick return of a strong stock market, as well as an existing high level of inventory for larger properties for sale has enabled the affluent to swiftly make lifestyle choice changes over the last 6 months. These impacts may well have long lasting effects.

REMOTE WORKING

Many predict that remote working will become part of our society's norm, so moving back to the city may not become a priority once the pandemic is under control. Working remotely was already a growing trend, but with the onset of the pandemic the acceptance level from business owners and employees is at an all-time high; especially as productivity levels have mostly increased.

For instance, Dropbox, a San-Francisco based company, just recently announced that it will make working remotely a standard practice, extending its mandatory work at home policy through to June 2021.

MORTGAGE RATES

Mortgage rates have dropped to record lows and there is even a question as to whether they will eventually drop to 0%? Most economists think that this is unlikely to happen in North America, although in Denmark, Jyske Bank began offering a 10-year fixed rate mortgage at negative 0.5% in 2019!

More importantly, these low interest rates have created the opportunity for the affluent to easily access credit or refinance to make their new home purchases, without having to use funds from any other sources. When interest rates change, there are real-world effects on the ways people can plan their future finances.

Low mortgage rates spurred long-time fence-sitters to jump into the market, Realtor.com Chief Economist Danielle Hale says. But she acknowledges the housing boom is uneven.

"Among a lot of key homebuyer demographics, high-income folks, we haven't seen the same level of job losses that we have among lower-income workers," she said in a recent interview with Investor's Business Daily (IBD). "So that has helped the market from a homebuyer perspective."

Demographics are a factor too as more millennials — the nation's largest adult generation — are starting families and driving demand for single-family homes. And the leading edge of Generation Z, an even larger cohort that straddles young adults and adolescents, is just starting to buy homes.

STRONG STOCK MARKET

Accumulated wealth from the strong stock market is also helping to drive confidence in buying new homes. For many, there has been a shift in the balance of financial investment towards investing in lifestyle and family.

While real estate has been traditionally seen as a financial investment, the pandemic has resulted in real estate choices becoming more based on the intrinsic value; that of finding a great home offering space, security and privacy, rather than a property providing a great return on investment.

Turning back to the stock market, analysts are forecasting that in the foreseeable future real estate stocks should continue thrive. According to IBD one of the best-performing real estate stocks is D.R. Horton, the largest homebuilder by volume in the US, whose stock is up more than 45% so far this year.

In a recent interview between IBD and the luxury homebuilder Toll Brothers, CEO Douglas Yearley shared that their signed contracts soared 76% in June, jumped 31% in July, and August deposits were trending even better than July. Yearley explained a key reason behind Toll Brother's success is the resilience of its target demographic, college-educated professionals, where many are working from home and will continue to do so, and also statistically less likely to become unemployed.

INVENTORY LEVELS

When New York City, one of the most recognized wealthy cities, became an epicenter in this pandemic, the cast was set for change. The continued exodus of the affluent from key metropolitan cities since March 2020 and their search for properties that offer a safer haven has become one of the key reasons why great estates and large luxury properties have reclaimed their popularity.

Interestingly, the majority of these large homes, whose traditionally more remote locations had deterred buyers in proceeding years, creating increasingly higher and higher levels of inventory.

However, their immediate accessibility and availability, coupled with changing demands, actually led the luxury real estate market back from its significant "pause" in late March and early April, and continued helped fuel its momentum during the last six months.

As we move forward into the last quarter of 2020, it is important to recognize that many of these shifts we are seeing will continue to be impacted by how long the pandemic remains a major influence.

Some changes have merely been sped up, such as working remotely and online purchasing. Others are habits that will become more resilient to change once they have been learned, for instance e-learning and telehealth, once considered inferior products, their necessity has helped in their transition very effectively. While items such as a luxury vacation might currently be replaced by new toys or exotic objects, in the long run once travel is more accessible, these substitutions will not last.
